Non-Conformist Preachers Refrain from Al luding to the Baccarat Scandal. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

LONDON, June 7 .- Contrary to expectation to-day the non-conformist preachers of London and vicinity were reserved so far as heard from, on the subject of the baccarat trial. It is believed that they are keeping their thunder for the close of the case. Among the people, as in upper society, the trial continues to excite the greatest interest, and it is said that even yesterday the Chief-justice received several applications for seats in the court-room to-morrow. As stated in these dispatches two weeks ago, the royal family has grown tired of the continual libels circulated about its members, and future attacks of a serious character will be met by a resort to the courts. Royalty is an exception to the rest of England in passing libels unnoticed. No Englishman ever neglects an opportunity to bring a libel suit, and, unless he has a very bad case, he usually wins. It has become known, however, that members of the Queen's family will not go into the courts, and consequently half the stock in trade of sensational English publications is to concoct stories about the royal house. In future, it is understood, such matters will not be treated with the same indifference as in the past.

Prospective Conflict Between German and French Colonies in Africa. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

LONDON, June 7 .- A German colonial council of experts has been in session during the week to consider the question of how best to promote cotton-growing in German colonies, as well as the principle which ought to regulate the granting of concessions to new companies, especially in southwest Africa, and to suggest how the $1,500,000 lately granted by the Reichs-tag for the development of the resources of the Cameroons ought to be applied. It is claimed that France is endeavoring to grasp territory which is German by right of prior exploration and contiguity, and there is a strong sentiment in favor of forcible occupation of the territory in question on the ground that the Cameroons would be of little value without it.

How a Wealthy German Celebrated the Marriage of a Daughter in the Fatherland. Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

COLUMBUS, June 7 .- A very novel mock wedding ceremony was performed in this city at 9:30 A. M. to-day at the residence of Henry Lang, a wealthy and influential German. At the time mentioned a number of the friends of Mr. Lang and family met to celebrate on this side of the globe the matrimonial union of Mr. Lang's nephew, Ernest Feldman, with Emma Kleb, in the far distant city of Hellenbach, Westphalian Prussia. Mr. Lang's daughter Emma, who sailed some three weeks ago on board the Fuerst Bismarck, for Hamburg, acted as the first bridesmaid in the real wedding, while Miss Ella Martin and Mr. Gus Kuenneke personated the happy couple in this city. The ceremo-nies, by a careful calculation of the differ-ence in longitude, was performed at the same moment of time. The happy young couple will establish their home in the old Prussian homestead, where Mr. Lang was born sixty-eight years ago. At the mock wedding here a very happy hour was spent. The refreshment served was wine from Mr. Lang's own vintage. A case of the same wine was shipped some time ago to Prussia, and it was drunk at the real wedding at the same hour it was drunk here.

The massive handles consist of solid bars of oxidized silver and extend along both sides of the coffin. On the lid are three large silver figures emblematic of the flight of time, in white silk. The inside is made of solid silk, and also displays heavy silken handles. The inscription on the silver plate has not yet been engraved. end.

Two circumstances will operate very seriously to impair the moral effect of this report (that of the General Assembly committee in the Briggs case) and the action had upon it. Princeton Theological Seminary and Union Theological Seminary have represented the two schools inharmoniously united in the Presbyterian Church-Princeton being Old School and conserva-tive; Union, New School and progressive, although the former pro-fessor of systematic theology was even more Calvinistic than Professor Hodge. The relations between these seminaries have been somewhat strained; so much so that the Presbyterian Review, which was under the joint control of the two seminaries, had to be abandoned. If anything should occur to bring Union Theological Seminary into disrepute and send its students away from it they would, from geographical and theological reasons, naturally go to Princeton, its nearest neighbor and its closest competitor. Under these circumstances it cannot but be regarded by the world at large as a matter of singular indelicacy that the moderator of the General Assembly, himself a Princeton professor, should have appointed the president of Princeton College as the chairman of the committee to whom the case of the Union Theological Seminary and of Dr. Briggs would naturally be referred, and that there should not have been on that committee a single member to represent the views-we will not say the interests-of Union Theological Seminary. In effect, Princeton Seminary, through its officials, has had the shaping of the report upon the question of the direction and administration of its competitor, not to say its rival theological institution. Ontside of ecclesiastical politics such a condition of affairs could hardly

MAJOR E. A. BURKE. What Louisiana's Fugitive Ex-Treasurer Is Doing in Honduras.

Washington Letter in New York Tribune. Some one passed through Washington a few days ago, just from Honduras, where he had either seen or heard all about E. A. Burke, the fugitive ex-Treasurer of Louisians. Burke, it appears, had obtained large and presumably very valuable grants from the government of Honduras some years before the discovery of his trouble in Louisiana. He was at the time in London, endeavoring to negotiate for the capital necessary to develop these alleged bonanzas. It is generally understood by those who knew much of Burke's affairs that he had been quite successful in his mission to England, having raised a large sum and secured the promise of much more. Of course, the Louisians disclosures stopped all this, though it is now believed that he must have already transferred large amounts, for the work he has since done in Honduras undoubtedly represents a far greater expenditure of money than he, personally, could have met. He had heavily involved his wife's fortune long before in various unprofitable ventures, and could not, therefore, have drawn upon that, even had it been available otherwise. At any rate, I hear that after his escape from England he went to Honduras and began work on a gigantic scale, developing his possessions. Among other things, he turned aside the river Mangualil at a point where experts had declared that it had deposited great quantities of gold, laying bare its bed for several miles. This achievement employed many hundreds of men for months and, even at the beggarly wages paid to rough labor in Honduras, must have cost a vast sum of money. The whole enterprise, however, was fruitless. No gold worth the trouble of collecting was discovered, and Burke found himself, at the close of a season of stupendous effort and exertion, not only without the smallest material reward but, in fact, bereft of his last illusion as regarded that feature of his scheme. It must have been a terrible blow. He is a man of extraordinary nervous temperament, capable of herculean energy under the stimulus of some great purpose, but subject to collapse and prostration of corresponding intensity under failure. I am told by people who know him inti-mately that his ambition was to make money enough in Honduras to square his accounts in Louisiana, and in that way to arrange a compromise by which he could return. The same persons declare that Burke's ambitions were never of the sordid kind, and that all the money he has made away with was spent for self-glorification or for political effect. Indeed, it is con-jectured that the $100,000 known to have been sent from Louisiana to Indiana in 1884 was secured by Burke (probably through the medium of those very bonds out of which he defrauded the State.) Certainly I know, as an indisputable fact, that he came on to Washington in 1985, immediately after Cleveland's manguration, confidently expecting some very handsome recognition of his services during the campaign. He claimed that he had a distinct understanding with Daniel Manning and, up to the last moment, had supposed he was to be made Postmaster-general. When the prospect faded, he came on, as I have said. The President, however, treated his pretensions with contempt, declaring that neither Mr. Manning nor any one else had the slightest authority to make promises for him and, in a word, repudiating Burke outright and absolutely. Mr. Cleveland carried this so far as to embrace the entire Democratic faction to which Burke belonged, and which included many of the ablest men in Louisiana. It was here that the great Cleveland-Eustice quarrel took its rise, for Eustis, while he had no relations with Burke beyond those of politi-cal affiliation, strongly resented Mr. Cleve-land's ostracism of a large and powerful wing of the Democratic party which had done much, not only in Louisiana, but elsewhere, to secure Mr. Cleveland's election. The President and Eustis subsequently arranged their differences, but the former never relaxed his attitude toward Burke or his resentment of Burke's claims to

The stingy man would sell the sunshine, if he cou. i. The devil never puts on mourning when a stingy man joins church. The louder a stingy man says "Amen!" the more the cause of God is injured. There is nobody who works harder for less pay than the stingy man. if God only loves the cheerful giver, what do you suppose he thinks of the stingy

There is no kind of meanness that hurts the cause of God any more than stinginess. There is nothing over which a sinner is more apt to stumble than stinginess in a church member. The devil never feels lonesome in the company of a stingy Christian. Stinginess is a disease that is harder to cure than the small-pox. The stingy man is the last man in the world to ever find out that he is stingy. He will read this article, and thank God that it doesn't hit him.

Woman's Influence in Public Affairs. Harper's Weekly.

One of the most interesting recent aspects of public affairs in this community is the effective part in them taken by intelligent women. The State legislation providing for the removal of insane patients from county poor-houses was originated by women and successfully concluded under their auspices. The ethcient sympathy and action of women during the last municipal campaign would have been crowned with similar success but for the unexpected defection of men. The movement for cleaning the streets has been greatly stimulated by women, to whom its progress is largely due, and the effective work in the effort to raise a fund to secure the opening of the Metropolitan Museum on Sunday is done by women. All this work is done, also, in the most womanly way, and it is interesting as showing the development of a sense of the duty of citizenship which is wholly new, in this extent, among women. What Sherman's Army Did for Atlanta, Atlanta Constitution. "Do you know that had it not been for old General Sherman Atlanta's residences would not have the many pretty blue-grass lawns in front of them?" The speaker was Col. Charlie Furlow, of the comptroller's office. He was pointing to the patches of grass about the Capitol grounds. "We have planted twenty bushels of blue-grass seed on these grounds, but it will not grow well. That which is growing is sod, and it came from down here in the woods where Sherman's army camped. And that is where nearly all the blue-grass around Atlanta came from. You see, Sherman fed his horses on hay brought from the West. The seed from the hay was scattered all about the woods, and grew and thrived in the shade of the trees. That grass is now acclimated, and when removed in the sod it thrives. But you see that we have planted will not grow. It is truly an ill wind, etc.

Mr. Owen's Appointment Indorsed. New York Press.

President Harrison could have given the laboring men of the country no better proof of the sincerity of his desire to secure intelligent study of and wise legislation upon the immigration problem than he did by appointing ex-Congressman William D. Owen, the author of the Owen bill to restrict immigration, as the head of the Treasury's Bureau of Immigration.

KNIGHT & JILLSON,

75 & 778. Pennsylvania st CONSECRATION OF CHIMES.

The Ceremonies at the Church of the Sacred Heart, with Procession and Other Features. The new chime of four bells for the Church of the Sacred Heart, on Union street, were consecrated yesterday afternoon, with an imposing ceremony. A procession containing five hundred persons marched in front of the church in the following order: Young girls in white, Young Ladies' Sodality Society, Women's Sodality Society, priests bearing incense, Knights of St. George, Order of St. Francis. Rev. Father Ferdinand, provincial head of the Franciscans, officiated as master of ceremonies in the absence of Bishop Chatard, and was assisted by Reverend Fathers Auguetine and Francis, and the brothers of the order. After the sermon the service closed by each one striking the bells, while the choir sang a "Te Deum." The collection realized nearly $900, which about covers the cost of the largest bell, which weighs four thousand pounds, and is the present of congregation. The smallest weighs pounds, and was given by the family of Charles Wagner. The second in size was presented by the St. Francis Benevolent Society, and the third by the family of George Ohleyer. The total weight is 7,394 pounds, and the entire cost about $1,809. The bells were cast in the foundry of Henry Stuckstede, of St. Louis. The church, which is being rebuilt, after having been destroyed by lightning, will be finished and dedicated in the fall.

Reforming Gamblers. "I had rather a remarkable experience when I was chaplain in the army," remarked one of the ministers at the Pastor through the principal down-town streets.

"What was it?" "I had been working and talking to the boys about gambling, and they finally turned all the cards in the camp over to me. The next day they were paid off. The following day I was passing out and saw a blanket spread out, with two lumps of sugar on one corner, and about half the money in the camp spread out,"

"What were they doing?" "They were betting on which lump of sugar a fly would first light, and all the money on the blanket changed hands on the result. "What did you say?"

"I said: 'Here, boys, come get your Cheap Business.
